Dear Colleagues,

On behalf of the AHRS, we are so pleased to welcome you to the AHRS 2025 Alopecia Summit!

As the beautiful archway of this building states, [NEC] POST MILLE SAECULA PRAESCINDETUR OCCASIO ALIQUID ADJICIENDI. This is an adaptation of a quote from Seneca's Epistulae Morales (64.7–8), and it translates to: “Even a thousand ages hence, the opportunity to add something further will still be open.” The phrase reflects a belief in the unending progress and future discoveries of science and medicine. This feels especially appropriate given the strong progress in alopecia research and clinical studies. Now is an amazing time for those who treat patients with hair loss, the promise of discoveries and breakthroughs will be meaningful for all of us and the patients we treat.

We hope you will participate in all of the exciting sessions planned for you over these two days. It is an added benefit to be in New York City at this time of year, and we hope that your trip permits a bit of time to take in the magic and lights of the holiday season.

Sincerely,

ABOUT THE AHRS

The AHRS began as “The North American Hair Research Society (NAHRS)” in 1989, founded by a group of dermatologists committed to furthering research in hair-related disorders. The group had identified a need for an organization that supported hair research and were determined to fulfill it. The benefits of the interactions among clinicians, pathologists, clinical investigators, and basic scientists were of paramount importance.

Over the past decades, the connection between clinical and basic researchers interested in hair biology has nurtured the organization. In 2016, there became an apparent increased interest by Central and South American colleagues, and a “Pan Am Work Group” was established. In 2017, the NAHRS, which was previously focused in the U.S. and Canada, formally expanded to “American Hair Research Society (AHRS)” —the hair research society representing all of the Americas. In 2018, AHRS added to its meeting calendar sessions at CILAD, RADLA, and other prestigious meetings in Latin America.

MEETINGS

We provide a forum for sharing clinical, therapeutic, and scientific information at annual meetings associated with the Society for Investigative Dermatology (SID), the American Academy of Dermatology (AAD), and more recently, Reunion Annual de Dermatologos Latino-Americanos (RADLA, translation: Latin American Congress of Dermatology), and Colegio Ibero-Latinoamericano de Dermatologia (CILAD, translation: Ibero Latin American College of Dermatology). In addition, we hold scientific sessions at the World Congress of Dermatology and International Investigative Dermatology meeting. A major goal of the society is to encourage the active interchange of ideas between clinical practitioners, clinical investigators, and basic researchers interested in hair.

This is important because rapid advances in basic research, such as the sequencing of the human genome, need to be applied to problems in hair research. The AHRS seeks to decrease the lag time between the advent of new technology and its application to hair research. Similarly, the AHRS promotes the translation of findings in the laboratory to new treatments that can help patients with hair loss.

The AHRS also has mentorship and Seal of Recognition programs.

AHRS MISSION

The mission of the AHRS is:

- ⇒ To strongly encourage and promote scientific research in the field of the normal and disordered hair growth.
- ⇒ To promote dissemination of state-of-the-art knowledge on hair biology and medical hair disorders.
- ⇒ To promote interdisciplinary interaction between basic scientists and clinicians through regular meetings, publications and innovative communication.
- ⇒ To establish links with other international hair research societies and to arrange combined meetings on a periodic basis.
- ⇒ To educate both our colleagues and the public on hair biology and the pathophysiology and treatment of hair related conditions.
